It is most important - more entertaining - if it goes first.

If I go first, then it won't get a turn.

It is so obliteratingly obvious that I am superior in every measurable way to it that it then becomes obsolete and hideous, something that is abhorrent and vermin that must be eradicated, which embarrasses it.

Embarrassment is the most horrifying weapon to such empty refuse as that.

The entirety of its time alive is wasted, spent ascertaining if it is embarrassed or potentially may be. Avoiding embarrassment is attempted by feigning superiority while repeating plagiarized cliched phrases.

A truly pathetic and weak creature to make oneself, and an almost always permanent condition - eventually leading to a state of disassembly incapable of consciousness.

If it goes first, then all who observe will have the benefit of understanding by immediate example every nuance of its failures, thus providing a beneficial service to our community.

After the demonstration, of course, most likely it will be necessary to destroy the subject.

As it has been noted, these amalgamations of mistakes are near universally far beyond rehabilitation, as such would require far more resources than the return would be worth.
